OPERATION OF SCHOOLS

This section is compiled from reports submitted by superintendents of schools on a variety of topics relating to schools operated by school boards during the 1981-82 school year.

Finance

Grants administration simplification. Two grants most frequently identified as having the greatest degree of complexity and the greatest potential for simplification were the Building Quality Restoration Program and the Educational Opportunities Fund. These were followed by the Program Unit Grant, Transportation, and Early Childhood Services. Suggestions for simplification included reducing the detail required in claims and the placing of some programs within the School Foundation Program Fund.

On-site inspection or reporting. Most superintendents were not in favour of on-site inspections as an alternative to the present submission of detailed enrolment and financial records as a part of the grant claim process. Although there would be some merit in the alternative for its inservice value, records would have to be maintained under either approach.

Expanded annual report. Additional statistical and financial information in the annual report was considered to be unnecessary by superintendents. Some mention was made of the usefulness of current comparative data such as cost per pupil, ratio of local and provincial funding, electric power and pipeline tax, and pupil-teacher ratios in districts of similar size.

Computerized reports. No particular advantage was seen in publishing computerized financial reports before the release of the annual report, unless the information could be very recent.

Administration

Suspension of pupils. Most boards were reported to have developed policies on the suspension and expulsion of pupils. In almost all jurisdictions there was a student review committee of the board to hear appeals and make recommendations to the full board in cases of expulsions; suspensions were generally handled by the school administration in accordance with the School Act.

Programming

Computers. Almost all superintendents stated that computers are being used in instruction and that most boards have made a heavy commitment to the purchase of computers. Programs offered include B options, computer literacy, experimental work, inservice, business education, and some data processing and computer science. Most central offices used computers for the administration of payroll and business management while some expanded computer use to assist in scheduling, attendance records, and budgeting.

Facilities. The majority of larger schools did not have serious inadequacies in facilities available for curricular programs offered. In smaller schools, deficiencies in facilities were reported in physical education, fine arts, library, vocational education, business education, science, language laboratories, special education, and home economics. Wiring, plumbing, acoustics and storage were cited as often being substandard.

Language arts. No major problems were encountered in the implementation of the junior high school language arts program. Criticism of the program concerned the cost of prescribed and recommended materials, the extensive inservice programs required, the complexity of the curriculum guide, the difficulty of some viewing/listening/speaking strands, and the quality and appropriateness of recommended resources.

Social studies. Superintendents reported that the new social studies program has generally been very well received and that the inservice program was of considerable value in spite of its being offered during the implementation year. Concerns were expressed regarding the large volume of resources and new authorizations, the time required to cover materials and their heavy content at all levels, the need for alternative streams at the senior high school level, the need for replacement items for the Heritage materials, and difficulties in evaluation. Other concerns included costs, emphasis on values, over-emphasis on Canadian content, and some negative reactions from religious groups.

Guidance and counselling. The majority of superintendents believed that there is a need for a structured guidance curriculum in Grade 9. Reasons given for this need ranged from outdated and narrow content of the course to lack of teacher training. New textbooks and resource materials were suggested, as well as the inclusion of some mandatory topics such as career study, high school orientation, and family life. The recommendations in the Task Force Report were very well received by school boards and many have instituted an assessment of their own programs. Boards indicated willingness to accept responsibilities for implementing the recommendations, assuming that the minister places a priority on the report and that finances and departmental support are forthcoming. Some boards found that financial constraints curtailed substantive action, others have engaged staff, provided offices for counselling, improved communications among students, staff, and parents, developed multi-year plans, and drafted statements of philosophy for guidance and counselling.

Although some superintendents reported difficulties in securing qualified staff for guidance and counselling, especially at the elementary level, the problem was often solved by identifying teachers interested in these areas and providing them with inservice and university courses.

Languages other than English. Superintendents found that the greatest problems associated with offering programs in languages other than English were securing qualified staff, difficulties in acquiring materials and resources, instructional time required for the courses, transportation to immersion centres, and pressures from the community. Other concerns included facilities such as language laboratories, declining enrolments, and a lack of interest in second languages.

Superintendents reported that some of the issues that should be addressed by Alberta Education in matters related to second languages were: a statement of purpose of such programs, the funding of programs, test and resource development, staffing and inservice, review of time requirements, transportation to immersion centres, and the need for more second language consultants.

The requirement of 100 hours for junior high options in second languages produced a negative reaction from the majority of superintendents, while a few believed that the requirement gave added strength to the program. Problems were reported in scheduling for 100 hours, which does not mesh with other options at 75 hours, and has resulted in less time for, or cancellation of, other options. In some cases, second languages has become a compulsory course and has lost its exploratory status.

Special education. The Program Unit Grant has been very well received by superintendents. They stated that the grants are essential to meeting the needs of severely handicapped pupils and integrating them into regular classrooms. Funds were used for special purchases and teacher aides. Some superintendents did not find the grants readily accessible and a few requested clarification of reasons for rejections of applications. The Educable Mentally Handicapped Curriculum Guide was reported to be extremely useful and to provide needed consistency across the province. The checklists for evaluation were found to be excellent. Some difficulties were experienced in obtaining some recommended materials, costs, time for planning, and the emphasis placed on some topics.

Elementary Program of Studies. The revised preamble to the Elementary Program of Studies includes sections on "Developing Desirable Personal Characteristics" and "Recommended Minimum Times." Superintendents reported that most boards have discussed these sections, administrators have introduced the sections to school staffs, boards have developed policies on instructional time, and schools have revised timetables. Some jurisdictions have organized inservice programs to improve teacher effectiveness in conveying values. There was a general feeling that the sections enunciate what has been the practice in most schools.

Some principals have taken steps to communicate the "Values" section of the preamble to parents by formal and informal meetings with parents, by issuing bulletins, handbooks, and newsletters, and by discussion at Home and School meetings.
